

Alastair Wilkins is Reader in Neurology at the University of Bristol and Honorary Consultant Neurologist to North Bristol NHS Trust. He graduated in medicine from the University of Cambridge and carried out his PhD in the same university. He has a research interests in the mechanisms of tissue repair in multiple sclerosis, genetic ataxias and related neurodegenerative disease. He holds several large grants and has published in a wide range of areas. He has written/ edited 2 books on multiple sclerosis. He sits on several committees for the MS Society (UK) and is a member of the examination board for the Royal College of Physicians (UK).