

Jenny Freeman is a Professor in Physiotherapy and Rehabilitation within the Faculty of Health and Human Sciences at Plymouth University, United Kingdom. Her research programme in MS centres on the development and evaluation of complex rehabilitation interventions; reflecting the priority given by health services to providing evidence based management. A key focus is on the rehabilitation of impaired mobility and balance with the aim of enabling people with MS to keep as physically active as possible. Her research is grounded in her longstanding clinical expertise in neurological physiotherapy and multi-disciplinary rehabilitation, for which she has an ongoing clinical commitment. Prof Freeman sits on a range of MS Committees and Advisory Groups including: RIMS and The Progressive MS Alliance Wellness Group.
